Mary and the first Christmas

By William L. Trimyer
Mary and the First Christmas
Lesson for June 6, 1982
Bible Study Passages: Luke 1:26-38; John 19-25-27

INTRODUCTION

This lesson marks the beginning of a three month study of some New Testament personalities. In this lesson we will focus upon the personality of Mary and her role in the life of Jesus as his earthly mother.

It is sad that Mary has been such a problem among religious circles. Roman Catholicism has deified Mary and, as a rule, Protestants have neglected her. Rahter than making Mary a problem, we can profit from an understanding of her role in the life of Jesus.

It is noticeable that both Matthew and Luke placed a big emphasis upon the birth of Jesus and Mary's role as mother to him. In the birth story, and throughout his gospel, Luke views history and the coming of Jesus as a cosmic drama of redemption. The announcement of Christ's entry into the world marked the triumphant day that history became impregnated with divine love. And Mary played a unique role in the unfolding divine draa.

In all honesty I must say that I see Mary as one who is to be admired, not worshipped.

Favor With God [Luke 1:26-27]

Mary received two affirmations from above. She was "highly favored" of God and she was to become the mother of the long, awaited Messiah. The term "favor" means that God graciously chose Mary to be the mother of Jesus. The term is not meant to imply that Mary "full of grace" in the sense that she thereby became the source of grace. Rather, it implies that Mary was the object of God's grace.

The greatest favor any Jewish handmaiden could anticipate was the privilege of becoming the mother of the Messiah. Many had believed it to be absurd that a mortal woman could become the mother of a divine child. But God's choice of entry into human life in the person of Jesus is only another example of the surprising ways of God who "chose what is foolish in the world to shame the wise and what is weak in this world to shame the strong" (I Corinthians 1:27).

A Royal Birth [Luke 1:28-38]

The biblical witness and tradition ascribes the birth of Jesus as coming from a woman not known of man. This implies that Mary was a virgin. We may wonder why Matthew and Luk make such an issue of the virgin birth when the rest of the New Testament is silent about it.

Some argue that the virgin birth preserves the humanity of Jesus, or that it shows how God was totally responsible and in control, or that preserved a convincing argument against those who denied the humanity of Jesus.

Actually, the wonder of wonders is not that Jesus was born of a virgin, but that God entered human life in the flesh and walked among us. The real focus of the birth narratives is upon the creative power of God and not upon the miraculous conception.

We might ask, "What's so great about being the favored of God?" We tend to equate favor with God with properity and pleasure. But Mary did not experience pleasure or prosperity as the favored one of God. There is nothing glorious about trapesing from town to town in search of a safe place to give birth to a child. There's nothing favorable about giving birth to a child in a cow stall. Mary's son did not grow up to become labeled as most popular or most likely to succeed! We, too, will sometimes discover that favor with God may mean hardship and struggle.

Farewell at the Cross [John 19:25-27]

At death the tables were turned as Jesus became his mother's savior. She who bore this son and nurtured him to maturity would now come to know him as savior. The lonely hours upon the cross found Jesus severing his ties to his mother and other family members in order to fulfill the lonely task of redemption.

One of his final desires was that his mother might be cared for after he was gone. The passage seems to suggest that from that time on Mary went to live with John.
